

Myra Colis has overall 15 years of professional experience in careers involving information, learning, research, data analysis, marketing and communications. She started out as a journalist, gathering information, writing and reporting for a daily radio newscast back in the Philippines. A couple years later she shifted her career path to teaching English as a second language at a public high school in the Philippines and at an international school in China. When in China, she pursued other interests and studied web design and development as well as business administration, while working as a managing editor and afterwards a content manager for companies catering to the the medical, healthcare and pharmaceutical sectors in China. At present, she now finds a new home in the Netherlands with her beautiful son, a loving husband, and her entrepreneurial pursuit she named as E3 Data Intelligence Services (e3dis.com).

When she arrived in the Netherlands the end of 2012, she was keen in looking for Filipino organizations to grow with and Stichting Bayanihan's work in empowering Filipinas inspired her the most. She joined Bayanihan's working board as secretary by mid 2014 and to date is still involved in helping with events, documentation and management of social media alongside other digital deliverables.
